ABOUT ROHAN MARLEY

Rohan Marley is an entrepreneur, philanthropist, and former football player best known for carrying forward the legacy of his father, reggae legend Bob Marley.

Marley's entrepreneurial journey reflects deep roots in sustainability, ethical commerce, and cultural heritage. In 2007, he founded Marley Coffee, a certified-organic coffee company based in Jamaica's Blue Mountains, with goals of equitable sourcing, environmental stewardship, and honoring his father's vision of connection to the land. Beyond coffee, he is involved in diverse ventures, including the House of Marley line of audio goods; the Tuff Gong Clothing Company; and more recently, Lion Order, a lifestyle and cannabis brand aligned with Rastafari-informed values of health, consciousness, and community.

ABOUT INNER CIRCLE

Inner Circle is a trailblazing reggae band from Kingston, Jamaica, founded in 1968 by brothers Ian and Roger Lewis. With over five decades of musical innovation, they've become icons both in their homeland and around the world.

Beginning as a backing group and evolving into a powerful original outfit with leading reggae vocalist Jacob Miller in the 1970s, Inner Circle's early catalog is rooted in authentic Jamaican rhythms and socially conscious lyrics. After Miller's death in 1980, the band reformed and in the 1990s achieved global crossover success with hits like "Sweat (A La La La La Long)" and "Bad Boys," the latter famously used as the theme to the TV series COPS.

Over the years, Inner Circle has remained committed to uniting people through music. Their live performances are vibrant and inclusive, carrying messages of love, social justice, and resilience. Today, they continue to record and tour globally, collaborating with younger reggae artists while preserving the traditional roots and heritage that built their sound.
